DETAILED ACTION

1. Acknowledgment is made of applicant's amendment, which was received by the Office on March 19, 2007.
2. Claim 22, 43, 50, and 56 are canceled. Claims 1-21, 23-42, 44-49, and 51-55 are active.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

3. Upon further reconsideration of applicant's amendments to the claims, the Examiner is withdrawing the 35 U.S.C 102(b) rejections based on the Zarintechi et al (US 6,442,434) and Prem et al (US 5,630,836) patents, which was made against claims 1-3, 10-12, 17, 23, 27, 28, 30, 36, 38, and 40-42 in the last Office action.
4. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1-3, 10-12, 17, 23, 27, 28, 30, 36, 38, and 40-42 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.
5. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –
(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.
6. Claims 1-3, 10, 11, 13, 17, and 23-26 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Mann et al (US 4,082,097).

The Mann et al (US 4,082,097) patent describes an implantable tissue stimulator system (Fig.1) including an external transmission module 20 including a transmission coil 19 for inductively coupling to receiver coil 18 of an implantable tissue stimulator for the transmission of energy for powering the stimulator. The system of Mann et al may operate in a variety of modes. One mode of operation (Mode 1, col.11, lines 24-56) appears to read upon applicant's claimed function of automatically inducing energy into the implantable device if it is within range of the transmission module. Specifically, charging automatically occurs when the charging head 55 of the transmission module 20 is properly aligned with the receiver coil 18 (i.e. "within range") (col.11, lines 24-27). A charging current of 600ma is induced to power implantable device rechargeable battery 12. A green light/LED (L_G) on the externally located transmission module 20 is lit to indicate this condition.

In regard to claims 10 and 11, the implanted device of Mann et al may be a pacer (col.2, lines 64-65).

In regard to claim 13, the implantable pacer of Mann et al would inherently have sensors since Mann et al suggests that the implanted pacer may be a demand-type (col.1, lines 32-33).

In regard to claim 17, the Examiner considers the inductive link to be "loosely coupled".

In regard to claims 24-26, applicant's attention is directed to rechargeable battery 12 (Fig.1).

Allowable Subject Matter

7. Claims 4-9, 12, 14-16, 18-21, and 27-42 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

8. Claims 44-49 and 51-55 are allowed.

Conclusion

9. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

The Schroepel et al (US 5,749,909) patent describes a system including an external device 10 (Fig.1) for transcutaneously inducing power into an implantable pacing device 30. The Schroepel et al system includes an alignment indicator (i.e. proximity monitor) for determining if the external device is within optimum range to induce power into the implanted pacer. Unlike applicant's claimed system, that of Schroepel et al fails to specify whether or not power/energy is automatically initiated when the external device comes within range of the implanted pacer.
